home and place of worship, or some equally remote avenue of public life. But could worship and work be united at a yet more fundamental or religious level? Robert A. Wauzzinski addresses this question and the conventional wisdom that stands behind it in Between God and Gold by suggesting that

Evangelicalism and Industrialism, as world movements, are apparently different in their assumptions about life. The former view

Industrialism, on the other hand, draws upon a naturalistic view of the world. Here, principles from a mechanistic, materialistic, Deistic, and a pragmatic, scientific secularity comprise the contours of the world view.

However, can we speak of only two separated views, apart from any basic shared

commitments, that do not affect each other?

Wauzzinski argues that the urgency of this question forces itself upon us. He contends that both movements share deeper culture, the equation of a theistic view of natural efficacy of the "gain-foundational concerns for both movements.

survey how nineteenth-century enthusiasts attempted to "incorporate" America under the aegis of Industrialism and related values.

Accordingly, commitments, work, theology, culture - art, politics, education, and worship - were accommodated to meet the demands of Industrialism. The heart of Between God and Gold can be located in the survey of three representative nineteenth-century Evangelical figures: evangelist Charles Finney, scholar Francis Wayland, and philanthropist/clergyman Russell Conwell. The lives and thought of these notables are

It is into this matrix that Wauzzinski probes the interconnections

between Protestant Evangelicalism and the Industrial Revolution.

Finney wrote, "A obedience to God."

Charles Finney brought

G.Gilchrist Lawson wrote this about him, "He was the greatest evangelist and theologian since the

"Sin is the most expensive thing in the universe." "The Christian warfare is a war between the will and Satan." "To commit yourself to Christ implies that you merge yourself in Him, make Him your end of life, make His glory your supreme end in all you do. You merge your will in His will, so that, apart from Him, you will have no will of your own. You wish for nothing, save what pleases Him."

"The Bible teaches that sin is forgiven when it is repented of, but never Charles Finney, as the above quotes reveal, was blessed with a passion for souls, the fire of John the Baptist, and great zeal for the truth of God's Word. Each chapter within this compelling book abounds with God-pleasing thoughts, anecdotes, suggestions, and words of
