In the Wake of Terror 1 is a book to be read by any subscriber to the Journal who wishes to get a glimpse of what has happened to the United States since the events of September 2001. Despite being written in the immediate aftermath of those events (the book was 'put to bed' in the spring of 2002), and despite limiting its scope to medicine, this collection paints an alarming picture of how readily our human rights might be put aside in the name of the public good.

Synopsis. An exploration of the emotions of despair, fear and anger that arose after the terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon in the autumn of 2001. The authors analyze reactions to the attacks through the lens of terror management theory, an existential psychological model that explains why humans react the way they do to the threat of death and how this reaction influences their post-threat cognition and emotion.

Abstract. This article asks what happened to racially motivated hate crimes in the wake of the 7/7 terror attack that hit London in July 2005 and the 9/11 terror attack that hit the United States in September 2001. There is anecdotal and descriptive evidence of an increase in bias-motivated crimes since the 9/11 terrorist attacks in the United States, but little quantitative research on the issue.
