Mr. Tannery and Professor Wright concluded in 1933 that the princes had "probably" died in the summer of 1483. Sir Thomas More states that the princes were smothered with the pillows on their beds by Sir James Tyrell, John Dighton and Miles Forest. Tyrell is reported to have confessed to the crime in 1502 when under sentence of death for treason.

Bells rang up and down the Spanish countryside, relaying the message. Ringing tidings of joy. The prince[1] was saved. He had recovered from the illness which had stricken him after attending Vespers on the eve of the second anniversary of her Majesty, D. Isabel's death. [1] Prince Baltasar Carlos died on 9 October 1646, here he has survived.
