involved selling service agreements on technology-based products. For many it's a major source of income. In almost all cases it's the major source of profits for their companies. Every product or system manufactured and installed eventually falters or fails. Current product designs that integrate electronics, software, and mechanical devices require repair, retrofits, upgrades, and on-going maintenance. The growing number of products and systems being integrated has created a new category of users with wide ranging service needs. Product applications continue to grow, but for the most part service offerings and service sales strategies remain the same. Most companies utilize the same resources to train both service sales and product sales personnel. The information presented is typically generic in nature, falling short of what's needed. People selling products are trained to sell features, functions and benefits. Service sales people need to be trained to sell value and master abstract selling concepts. There is little commonality between the two sales processes. Service is Not a Product is written specifically for individuals engaged in selling service.

struggle to create the consistency and predictability in their business that will lead to financial freedom. Is this happening to you? Perhaps you were taught tactics that failed to deliver the results you were promised. Those tactics didn't work, because they aren't in alignment with who you are, which is why they may have felt sleazy, slimy, and smarmy. The reason that happened is because you weren't taught the skills that will consistently help you find your next ideal client. Which is exactly what I'm going to show you how to do in this book. This book was written with you in mind, the expert entrepreneur, seeking to find the fastest path to creating repeatable success, without the hustle, hassle, and headaches that come from chasing clients. Growing your business isn't about chasing prospects
