Apr 22, 2011 11:17 | #1 I'm getting into off-camera "strobist" flash photography, and I was given an old Vivitar 3500 flash. It works fine with my radio trigger, but I don't know how to get it to do anything but full power. It's a thyristor flash, which senses the light reflected back from the subject and turns off the flash at the right time.

I have acquired an old Vivitar Zoom Thyristor 2500 flash with no instruction manual. It has the usual red, blue auto settings with M (They all seem to work OK). (On the PC cord - hot shoe Kaput.) Now, it also has a yellow triangle setting (making 4 in total). Up on the sliding scale (ASA 800 - 25), three ASA divisions higher than the indicator, is the yellow triangle again. If I set the ...

I received a Vivitar Zoom Thyristor 2500 flash unit and am looking for a resource to help determine if it is compatible with my Canon 5dsr, Rebel XSi or SX50 HS. Thanks for any assistance. Rich . A used Canon flash is cheaper than a new camera. And, there would be no compatibility questions or issues, either. -----"Doctor told me to get out and walk, so I bought a Canon." Me too. Report ...
